Syntonics is a process using viewing of coloured light to treat various vision problems.

The theory and practice of syntonics has been evolving for decades, but the absolute scientific evidence for the use of syntonics is still developing. As the scientific studies are not fully established as yet,

ACBO believes syntonics as a treatment methodology should not be advertised, in accordance with AHPRA guidelines.

However, ACBO recognizes the right of suitably experienced practitioners to offer treatment with syntonics for indicated conditions after comprehensive assessment, following an appropriate verbal and written informed consent process with the patient, and/or patient's family.
